Copyright and License Agreements

Most, if not all, of the electronic databases and e-journals available through the Medical College of Wisconsin Libraries are governed by their own individual license agreements. A license agreement is a contract that may specify terms that are different from copyright law. In such instances the terms of the license have precedence.

While the terms in license agreements are generally similar to copyright law, there are often important differences with regard to the use of electronic resources.

When negotiating licenses for access to electronic resources, the Medical College Libraries pay particular attention to an acceptable definition of ‘Authorized Users’. For licenses negotiated by the Medical College of Wisconsin Libraries the following “Authorized User” categories are included: Medical College of Wisconsin faculty, students, and staff, on-campus-users from Children’s and Froedtert hospitals.

What types of use do licenses for electronic resources (electronic journals, databases, etc.) permit or disallow?

Please Note: If you have any question about acceptable uses of electronic resources, please contact the Medical College of Wisconsin Libraries at (414) 456-8302 or email asklib@mcw.edu.

Permitted uses in all agreements:

- typical research and educational uses: personal downloading, use in educational activities involving MCW students, staff and faculty.

Sometimes –but not always- permitted:

- sharing an article with a fellow researcher.
  From the Elsevier license: [Users are permitted to] “transmit Excerpts to other Authorized Users and to third-party colleagues for their scholarly or research use.”

- using electronic materials in course packs.
  From the BMJ (British Medical Journal) license: “Licensee and Authorized Users may use a reasonable portion of Licensed Materials in the preparation of Course Packs or other educational materials.”
  Please note: Some publishers/vendors permit the use of their materials in course packs under more restrictive terms.

Usually disallowed practices:

- Downloading articles “systematically”.
  For example: automated downloading using computer programs and downloading of entire volumes or issues.
- Using licensed materials in other commercial products or services unless permission from the publisher or vendor is obtained.

- Creating derivative works, products or services using licensed materials without the publisher’s/vendor’s agreement. From the Nature Publishing license: [It is prohibited to] “use the Licensed Material to create any derivative work, product or service, or merge the Licensed Material with any other product, database, or service.”

- Posting complete contents, e.g. of an article, without access restrictions on a website, or using any other means of broadly distributing licensed content to unauthorized users.

- Altering the contents and removing of copyright notices.
